

Looking for skilled labour?

Hiring offenders contributes to public safety

Understanding that most federal offenders will be released back into the community, CORCAN fosters safe reintegration by providing them with institutional employment as well as technical and soft employability skills.

Institutional employment and skills training increase the likelihood that offenders will find employment once released into the community. Research shows that offenders who maintain community employment are nearly three times less likely to return to custody with a new offence.

Workforce skills and training

Offenders who participate in employment and employability programs gain:

Technical skills

Training and/or certification in various fields including but not limited to construction trades, hairdressing, commercial cleaning, textiles, WHMIS and first aid.

Interpersonal skills

Soft skills such as dependability, teamwork, communication and punctuality.

Community support and supervision

Offenders are provided a support and supervision network to help in their successful reintegration into the community.

When you hire an offender, you are helping:

Your organization by gaining trained and certified labour.

Offenders by assisting in their successful transition back into the community as law-abiding citizens.

Fostering public safety.

More information

Program information: www.csc-scc.gc.ca/community-employment

Contact the CORCAN employment program: ces-sec@csc-scc.gc.ca